As above....orange colour. Being picked on by a larger, longer established Red Zebra, currently in isolation. In good health.

Red Zebra?????? There are about 100 Malawi Cichlids fish that go by that common name. Have you got the scientific name please?

I would always assume maylandi estherae when I hear red zebra.

A pic would be good + where would he need to be collected from?

Cheers,
Patrick.

Well excuse me if I've offended your sensibilities using such a common name as Red Zebra, but as per the above post my understanding is that it applies to a particular species.....M Estherae.

Relax there fella I'd hardly be offended by a post on an internet forum by a complete stranger, you didn't even mention it was a Malawi Cichlid either I just assumed.

Red Zebra could have meant anything. The mystery is solved now thanks.

My male light blue malawi fish would probably have battered it anyway :laugh: :laugh: :laugh: (Pseudotropheus Socolofi.)

A Zebra ????:unsure: It looks like a fish to me....the lack of black and white stripes and the presence of fins gives it away:woohoo:
